

Family and friends: Thank you for being here, and our deepest gratitude to _____ (name of officiant) for that _____ ceremony. Also, let's give it up for _____, who (adjective) (cover band) came all the way from _____.
(town on Long Island)

By the way, does anyone have a _____? If you could record this, that'd be (brand of smartphone) great. We couldn't afford a videographer. If you ate the _____ entrée, you know (type of protein)
why. New York prices, people!

So anyway, as we prepared for today, we thought back to the long road that took us here—from _____ to _____ to _____ and a few nights at (online dating site) (online dating site) (online dating site)
_____, where we felt _____ (club in the meatpacking district) (level of despondency)

It seemed like fate when we finally met: We both lived off the _____, (subway line)
which meant we could easily meet up after leaving work at _____. We'd curl up (time after 9 P.M.)
with some _____, watch _____ on Hulu, and think, "So this is what (type of cheap liquor) (bad TV show) our married friends in _____ were talking about!" Then we'd cook (hometown)
_____ together, which was _____ at first, but we got the hang of it. We (microwavable food) (level of fear) just had so much in common—from _____ to _____. We (hobby) (hobby you wish were a job) even brought out each other's adventurous sides, taking a day trip to _____!
(borough that isn't Manhattan)
When we told Dr. _____ about that, he/she just knew we'd be getting married.
(name of therapist)

Looking back, we've probably listened to _____ other couples' wedding (double-digit number) speeches. Now that it's our wedding, we understand what they were saying: Seeing everybody here is just so special. You're our _____, and we love (New York sports team that isn't the Jets) you. Now let's eat some cake, because that thing cost us _____ a slice. Cheers!
(price from $8 to $25)